Customer Reviews

Yeah, be careful of this book. There are a few disturbing scenes. Lots of beheadings. Nasty stuff done with the heads, also.

I keep buying these books on my son's requests. He is 10 and he's been reading them for over 3 years. The subject is not always covered but the books are good starters for young readers to look for more information if they need it. Recommended.

Kids who don't want to try non-fiction because they think it's boring will really be surprised to find that real amazing people are interesting to learn about. This series is a great way to get your non-fiction haters to become interested and want to learn more. My young readers love telling me about these true heroes!

These are the best nonfiction books for 3rd through 6th graders for AR. As a teacher and a parent, these are always my first recommendation to meet their AR goal. We require 3 nonfiction books per 9 weeks and these can be read in just a few days. They are informative and the kids overwhelmingly enjoy them.

My children and I love this series and have read much of it. I recommend it to people often. Who was Genghis Khan is the first disappointing volume we've encountered. In fact, I have chosen not to share this one with my sons. Obviously when depicting a leader such as Khan one can expect some violence, but this book's level of gruesome detail and the author's failure to place it into any historical context for such young readers struck me as extremely irresponsible. I am very disappointed with this purchase and would not recommend it to sensitive young readers.

This was a very disturbing book for my 10 year old son. He has read countless books in this series and really enjoys them. He is a real history buff. However, this historical figure should not be depicted in a children's book. There was too much violence for a kid to read.

Love these books as they are a perfect introduction for kids to these historical figures. My daughter loved Ghenghis Khan. I highly reccomend it. Whoemver wants to read only about inventors and atheletes should not be buying these books. Ghengis was a man of his time. I think it was very well presented.

My son loves all the Who was and what was books. He has learned so much from them and cannot wait until new ones are released
