This was my first time reading a book in this series. Other books in this series discuss civilizations such as the Vikings, Egyptians, and Celts. Quite a bit of knowledge packed into thirty-four pages. Curtis uses a conversational approach in discussing what peoples made up the Aztecs, where they originated, who were their leaders, and how they got elected. He includes descriptions of the cities they lived in, the pyramids within them, and their controversial religious views which involved human sacrifice. One of the sections that I found most interesting was Curtis's explanation of the social stratification system and the erratic system of justice they followed. Curtis gets down to everyday life when he talks about children, the games they played, their pictograph language, and the type of ornate artwork and clothing worn and displayed, especially among the noble classes. Of course the empire came to a swift end once the Spaniards landed and the welcoming Aztecs realized that Cortes and the Spaniards intended to deplete their economy and rule their lands with an iron fist. Two years later in 1521, the Aztec Empire had been conquered. These books are targeted for ages five through fifteen. While the text is clearly written, I feel it most appropriate for readers in the eight to twelve age range. The photos included are small but relevant. Parents, teachers, students and librarians will appreciate having this book on their shelves for reference and a good starting point for further exploration of the topic. I look forward to checking out others in the series.

I have read this book. This is an excellent Book. Very informative, there were some facts that I didn't know about the Aztecs people like they have a semblance of election for a ruler. This is a great book for a young adult. I enjoyed this book.

Excellent Book. Very informative, there were some facts that I didn't know about the Aztecs people like they have a semblance of election for a ruler. This is a great book for a young adult. Despite some misspelling, I will still definitely recommend this to my nephew.

Among the 4 kids I have 3 are aged 5, 7 and 12. This is an age where they all are extremely eager to learn and digest information presented maximum appealing. The Legends of History series is an outstanding work to catch kids attention with instructional and engaging pictures also inviting us parents to have very valuable follow up discussions. These increase bonding and much spent quality time for joyous interactions. I highly recommend this series for everyone having children within the authors announced age range to provide a long term adventure, support imagination and enhance learning sometimes zillion times more engaging and interesting than most school lessons offer. great work!

Just enough information to get them curious about the Aztecs and begin asking questions. Diverse enough to cover different aspects of daily life. Well written.

This is a great little book about the Aztecs. It is well researched and written. An enjoyable and informative read.

An ebook by Matt Curtis, about the Aztecs who were the rulers of the area where Mexico and Honduras is now.

All of these are great and the author needs to write more, They are all well written and interesting.
