Summer has changed to fall and a family is heading to the Apple Tree Orchard to buy some apples and taste their cider. The "air feels cooler" and "colorful leaves blow in the breeze." Bushel baskets sitting at the base of several trees are filled to the brim with ripe, red apples. When fall arrives its the perfect time to head to an apple orchard to buy apples and taste some tangy cider. The young girl smiles as she bites into a crisp red apple. Her wide-eyed little brother watches her as he prepares to take a bite out of a green one. They soon discover that there are seeds nestled inside the core of his apple. When they are in the orchard they will learn how those seeds are planted, how they grow into trees, and how and why "apples are different from the apple that made the seed." Do you know? If not, you'll learn why they are when you read this book. In the springtime the leaves grow from buds and quickly spread into beautiful, sweet smelling blossoms. Bees soon arrive to "spread pollen from tree to tree" to fertilize the blossoms. In this book you'll get to see what the apples look like as they grow, how apple pickers carefully harvest the crop, what happens if they pull off the spur, how the apple crop is used, and how apple cider and juices are made. Do you know how many apples are pressed to make a gallon of cider? This is an excellent book for the young student to learn about apples and what they are used for. There are many interesting apple facts interspersed through the pages of this tale of a family's trip to the orchard. One of the most exciting field trips for children in apple country is a trip to the orchard. A fair amount of information could be gleaned from this book in a read and discuss session in the homeschool or classroom setting.
